THE CONVERSATION

<https://theconversation.com/au>

We place a high value on trust.

Everything you read on The Conversation is backed by science and research from academics who work together with our team of editors. This collaboration turns academics' knowledge and insights into easy-to-read articles, making them accessible to the wider public.

The Conversation began in Melbourne, Australia, in March 2011. The UK edition launched in May 2013, followed by editions in the US (2014), South Africa and France (2015), Canada, Indonesia and New Zealand (2017), Spain (2018), and Brasil (2023).

THE CONVERSATION

There's a lot of focus on the need to provide better sex education. Even the federal government acknowledges we must do a better job of educating children and teens about consent, respectful relationships and sexual health.

But there are some alarming gaps in their basic biological knowledge by a new study that surveyed Western Australian teenage girls. Almost half of respondents didn't know that day one of the first day of menstruation. Fewer than 9% understood ovulation weeks before their period. More than 60% confused the vulva with the vagina.

The study's authors, led by Felicity Roux, warn: "If patients cannot answer basic questions, such as 'when was your last period?' or 'where is this happening in your body?', it could impact diagnoses and treatments. It also means they may not even go to a doctor, dismissing debilitating pain or heavy bleeding as 'normal'."
